Closing the Triangle in Trade

EC and Japan Try to Form Stronger Ties

By Reginald Dale International Herald Tribune
BRUSSELS — As they grow in stature as economic powers, the European Community and Japan have begun to realize that they both have closer relations with the United States than they do with each other, and that the disparity needs to be remedied.

European and Japanese officials say the Brussels-Tokyo axis is the "weak side of the triangle," the three-cornered relationship between the United States, the EC and Japan that dominates the world trading system. Too often, said a senior European official, relations between the EC and Japan have focused exclusively on commercial disputes, "which was not very positive." Now, however, and particularly since the visit to Brussels in June by Noborn Takeshita, the Japanese prime minister, the community and Japan want to forge new bonds comparable to those that link each

Underlying the new approach are concerns in Brussels that Japan has developed a preferential relationship with the United States, to the detriment of EC interests, and fears in Tokyo that the community may prove an increasingly aggressive trade partner as it establishes its post-1992 single market.

By E. J. Dionne Jr. New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — Cliches are the mother's milk of political rhetoric, and the battle for the best of them in this election year is heating up.

"Whoever controls the clichés wins you can bet the ranch on it," said John Buckley, a Republican political operative. Warming to his task, he added, "They say that people want originality, but that dog don't hunt."

The battle for the cliches is important. After all, cliches become cliches by virtue of long use, repetition that is in turn earned by their ability to ring true to the electorate. One popular kind of political cliché is the long-used phrase that a candidate will pick up to signal fidelity to a certain tradition or set of ideals. Governor Michael S. Dukakis's constant reference to "the American dream" is a case of a candidate's employing a cliché to do several things at once. The phrase allows the Democratic presidential nominee to demonstrate his patriotism, underscore his immigrant roots, reach out to other Americans with immigrant roots and east his campaign as a fight for expanded opportunity. All this in one cliché.

Then there are the phrases that the campaigns themselves invent. If they prove successful, they too ultimately become cliches. This year the Republicans are trying to get everyone to think of the Democrats as campaigning "in disguise," seeking to hide their liberalism.

Lee Atwater, campaign manager for Vice President George Bush, finds it hard to mention Mr. Dukakis without speaking the words "Massachusetts, Kennedystyle liberal." Mr. Atwater also likes to refer to Mr. Dukakis as "a Northernfried Jimmy Carter."

This is not to say that the Republicans have abandoned the time-tested clickes. In conversations with Bush aides, the phrase "peace and prosperity" crops up repeatedly. Campaigns' efforts to win voter acceptance of their cliches is a long tradition in Sunday was Navy Day in the Soviet Union and sailors of the Baltic Fleet strolled along the Neva in Leningrad, their risk background, to see the sights of the port. In just a few decades, the Soviet Navy has grown from a largely coastal fleet that seldom ventured far from land to a force with aircraft carriers, fast cruisers and nuclear missile submarines that range far from home bases.

"in a log cabin" as one of history's greatest cliché-related victories. "The fact was that he had been a Whig lawyer for 30 years," Mr. Gingrich said. "But being a Whig lawyer doesn't get you as far with the electorate as being born in

Mr. Gingrich has what might be called a grand theory of political cliches. It goes like this: "In every election in American history, both parties have their cliches. The party that has the cliches that ring true wins. And if the cliches continue to ring true when the party governs, that party and those cliches can change histo-

Inventing catch phrases is the hard way to go about this. Stealing them from the other side, or giving old ones new meaning, is the more common approach. Mr. Buckley, who was deputy press secretary to the Reagan-Bush campaign in 1984, argues that one of President Ronald Reagan's most exceptional political achievements was his seizing the term "full employment," a longtime Democratic catch phrase.

"When Democrats gave up the phrase full employment without inflation" to the Republicans, they gave away the election," Mr. Buckley said.

Mr. Dukakis, clearly aware of this, can crat." And those who have listened to a lot of his speeches complain about his repeated use of the phrase "good jobs at good wages." But the voters don't com-plain, and if "Dukakis" becomes synonymous this fall with "good jobs at good wages," then the candidate will have gained a great deal.

A party that is losing a battle of cliches tends to complain that the other side is misusing words. Nothing annoyed Democrats more in the early 1980s than Mr. Reagan's success at getting the words "family," "work" and "neighborhood" associated with the Republicans. Now the Democrats are on the counterattack, casting in just those terms the descriptions of the benefit programs they Propose.

The king's speech, reflecting the impact of the eight-month long Palestinian intifadeh, or uprising, in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, appeared to cast grave doubts on U.S. peace efforts which cast Jordan as the prime interlocuter for the Palestinians.

their eight-year war. The envoy, Deputy Foreign Minister Ali Ahmed Besharati, also said he expected U.S. protection of Kuwaiti tankers to end soon, and that Iran is ready to use its influence to gain the release of foreign

But the president cannot be neutral ei-

The presidency should promote the differing ways each country, or group of countries, sees the community evolving. That is maybe the greatest advantage of the revolving presidency. It ensures that the community's evolution is never one-sided. There are Northern and Southern points of view and richer and weaker countries. Everybody has the opportunity to point the community in the way it feels best. O. At the time of the first Greek presidency in 1983, Greece was regarded as a rather maverick country, perhaps not fully committed to the community. Has that changed?

A. There is now an overwhelming majority in the governing Socialist Party and its supporters in favor of the community.

Israel Detains 2 Leading Palestinians

JERUSALEM (AP) - The police detained on Sunday two prominent Palestinians, one of whom had taken part in a conference with Israeli peace activists on the uprising in the occupied territories. Eight other Arabs were detained for questioning about their alleged involvement in recent stone-throwing attacks on Israeli buses and police vans, the police

Of the two Palestinians being held under an "administrative detention" order was Faisal Husseini, director of the Arab Studies Center in Fast Jerusalem. The center was closed Sunday for one year after police accused it of receiving financial support from the Palestine Liberation Organization. On Wednesday, Mr. Husseini joined in a public dialogue with Israeli peace activists at an auditorium in the predominantly Jewish sector of West Jerusalem.

The police also detained Mustafa Tawfig Abu Zahara, head of an Arab merchants' group in Jerusalem, accusing him of organizing demonstrations and boycoits of Israeli products as well as inciting Palestinians not to pay taxes, a police spokesman said. The arrests were seen as an effort to forestall a broadening of PLO activities following a recent decision by King Hussein of Jordan to take a far less active role in the occupied West

Tunisian Leader Puts Stamp on Party 3

TUNIS (Reuters) — President Zine al-Abidine Ben Ali shook up the leadership of Tunisia's governing party on Sunday at the end of a three day congress that represented a major departure from the 30-year rule of former President Habib Bourguiba.

Mr. Ben Ali appointed two-thirds of the party's central committee putting his personal stamp on a party that Mr. Bourguiba had dominated since independence in 1956. In February, the party changed its name to Constitutional Democratic Assembly from the Destourian Socialist Party. The remainder of the committee was elected - a practice that Mr.

It was the party's first congress since Mr. Ben Ali took power in November, when Mr. Bourguiba, who will be 85 on Wednesday, was declared senile and forced to retire. Mr. Ben Ali, who changed nearly half the cabinet shortly before the congress began, dropped several members from the central committee who had served under Mr. Bourguiba. Other members linked with the Bourguiba era, however, remained on the

Italy's Mafia Buster Seeks Transfer

ROME (Reuters) - Giovanni Falcone, the architect of an unprecedented mass trial of Mafia members last year and the most experienced member of a pool of anti-Mafia magistrates in the Sicilian capital of Palermo, has requested an immediate transfer to other duties.

In a letter released Saturday, Mr. Falcone cited obstruction and discord with his superior over the conduct of the fight against the crime syndicate as the reasons for his request. His move heightens a crisis that broke last month with charges by a senior magistrate, backed by Mr. Falcone, that incompetence and misguided policies were crippling operations. The Supreme Council of Magistrates, the judiciary's governing body, met Saturday on the orders of President Francesco Cossiga to investigate the allegations.

Study Finds 2 Sides To Teens' Drug Use

The vast majority of teen-agers who occasionally drink or use drugs suffer no lasting ill effects and cannot be distinguished in later years from teen-agers who abstained, The New York Times reports. But the small minority who become heavy users of hard drugs and alcohol develop serious problems in young adulthood. Though they leave school, go to work and start families earlier than others, they experience dis-organized thinking. Cocaine users are prone to confrontational

The report was based on a study begun in 1976 by the University of California at Los Angeles of 1,600 teen-agers aged 12 to 15 from various economic, racial and ethnic groups. The teen-agers completed annual questionnaires for four or five years, and about half of them were tracked down

AMERICAN four years later, while in their early 20s, for a follow-up survey. Light drug use was defined as once a month or less; medium, weekly or less; and heavy, more than once a week. The study covered beer, wine and liquor, mari-juana and hashish, cocaine and other narcotics.

The study throws into question the effectiveness of the federal government's "just say no" approach to teen-age drug use, said one of the psychology professors who conducted the survey, Mi-chael Newcomb. He called occasional drug use a "normal rite of passage" for many teen-agers. Other experts say that risk of heavy use means teen-agers should not use drugs at all.

Israel's Begin May Speak Out About Lebanon

JERUSALEM - Menachem Begin, the former prime minister of Israel who made peace with Egypt in 1978 and resigned abruptly in 1983, a year after the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, indicated on Sunday that he would end his silence on the invasion. He asked a reporter to call his secretary for an appointment.

Mr. Begin resigned without explanation and went into seclusion in his home. Israelis said he was depressed by the growing toll of Israeli dead in Lebanon — more than 500 when he quit — and also by the death of his wife, Aliza.

An Armed Forces Radio reporter, calling Mr. Begin to congratulate him on his 75th birthday, asked when the Is-raelis could expect to hear from him on Lebanon.

"Today?" Mr. Begin responded with a laugh, then added: "One of these days. Speak with Yechiel Kadishai. We'll set up a time to talk about various subjects."

for Mr. Bush's campaign.
Another lament of Mr. Pinkerton is that yet one more of Mindulation of Savorite phrases, "publications of the property of the propert lic-private partnerships," is enter-ing the hallowed ground of political cliches. Mr. Dukakis uses the term to describe cooperation among government, business and labor in efforts to solve problems. In Mr. Pinkerton's view, the phrase is just a cover for a more intrusive government and "micro-socialism."

Some conservatives are not at all bothered that the Democrats have tried to claim a number of Reagan-era cliches as their own. Burton Yale Pines, senior vice president at the conservative Heritage Foundation, says the surest sign that conservatives are winning is the need that liberals feel to couch their ideas in such terms.

Mr. Pines contends that Mr. Dukakis and the Democrats are now in a position similar to that of Dwight D. Eisenhower and the Re-publicans in 1952. Just as Eisenhower needed to reassure the electorate that he accepted much of the New Deal, so Mr. Dukakis now needs to reassure voters that he will not abandon the entire Reagan leg-acy. Mr. Dukakis signals this, Mr. Pines said, by repeatedly using words like "strength," "growth," "optimism," "family," and "entrepteneurship."

But other conservatives worry that the Democrats are becoming too good at mastering the conserva-tive vocabulary. Mr. Buckley, for example, fears that the Democrats may succeed in suppressing the word "spend" from the public discussion and replacing it with the more businesslike "invest."

To be sure, the Republicans have not yet held their own convention. where they will try to catch up in the battle of cliches. Which is to say that, although the Democrats have captured the high ground at this point in time, it's still early in the

Italian Ship Sails From Nigeria With Toxic Waste

The Associated Press LAGOS — An Italian ship has sailed with 167 containers of toxic waste retrieved from the Nigerian port of Koko, where it had been secretly unloaded a year ago.

The ship's destination was not announced. It was one of two ships sent by Italy to remove several thousand tons of toxic waste dumped 240 kilometers (150 miles) southeast of Lagos. Nigeria's military government had temporarily seized an Italian ship to enforce its demand that the waste be removed. Nigerian authorities arrested 15 people last month, including sever-al Italian nationals, in connection with the dumping. The government has said people convicted of such acts could face the death penalty. The waste, which Nigerian newspapers said had originated in 10

GORONGOSA DISTRICT,

Mozambique — In the heart of Mozambique, a group of anti-gov-ernment rebels facing regional and international isolation continues to plot the destruction of this country's ailing transport and electricity etwork from the seclusion of these shifting forest headquarters.

In spite of a two-year offensive by Mozambican, Zimbabwean and Tanzanian troops, a ragtag rebel army of the Mozambican National Resistance Movement, known by its Portuguese acronym Renamo, has survived and even stepped up its attacks.

Renamo, commanded by Afonso Dhlakama, 35, a former supporter of the governing party, had its ori-gins as a mercenary force sponsored by Rhodesia, and later received South African support.

More recently, the guerrillas, thought to number between 15,000 and 20,000, have lost much of their foreign support, but have managed to continue attacks on railroads, roads and electricity lines, as well as staging frequent hit-and-run at-tacks on towns held by the MozamThe rebels cannot match the Sobican Army. Because of the extensive Renamo presence in much of rural Mozambique, many of these towns have been turned into virtual islands, reachable only by air.

Zambia Flies Around Pretoria Sanctions

By Blaine Harden Washington Post Service

LUSAKA, Zambia — When Congress imposed sanctions that canceled U.S. landing rights for South African Airways, the airline told its customers: "Don't Worry. We're still flying high."
South Africa's national airline bragged in a newspaper advertisement that it would circumvent the U.S. sanctions "thanks to our friendly association with our colleagues."

Nearly two years later, in an international efironic twist in the international ef-fort to isolate the white minority regime in South Africa, the "col-league" that is making it possible for South Africans to fly almost directly to New York is Zambia Airways, the national carrier of a black-ruled nation. Zambia, one of Pretoria's most vocal critics and an occasional target of South African armed attacks, has begun jumbo-jet service that offers South Africans the shortest, fastest and, in many cases, cheapest air passage to North America.

states that oppose South Africa's racial policies, has been at the forefront in calling on Western Europe and Japan to join the United States in economic sanctions against Pretoria. He says that "the rest of the world should not benefit where American businessmen are losing. It is not fair."

Yet Mr. Kaunda conceded in an interview that Zambia Airways is profiting from U.S. sanctions.
"Yes, I agree," he said. "But what do you expect us to do? If we stopped that, how does it help in terms of this region?" The new flight is a reminder of the close economic ties that remain between South Africa and the black-ruled nations of southern Africa. It also shows that the frontline states, in dealing with Pretoria, cannot afford symmetry between their anti-apartheid rhetoric and their business dealings.

Zambia is in the midst of an economic crisis. Its standard of living has been decaying for more than a decade. Child death from malnutrition has doubled in the President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia, chairman of the organization of black-ruled "front-line" $5.3 billion.

Three Threads of Peace

Suddenly, a season of peace seems to be warming the world. The last few months those that the United States has long sought.

Since the Carter administration, America have seen five bitter and protracted conand Central America, populations stunned by endless war look up and hope.

Rarely have so many such wars seems to be drawing to a close at once. Is the world doing something right? Or is the coincidence of peace as uncontrollable as some favorable conjunction of the planets? Although each conflict has collapsed for its own reasons, two common threads can be discerned.

One is the new Soviet foreign policy. Mikhail Gorbachev has ceased issuing blank checks to revolutionary regimes. Vietnam, having mismanaged its economy, is now willing at least to talk about withdrawing its garrison from Cambodia. The Sandinistas have been driven into negotiations with the contras. Fidel Castro seems ready to recall Cuba's expeditionary force from Angola. The Soviet Union itself is pulling back from its military adventure in Afghanistan. Thus four of the five wars are susceptible to changes in Moscow.

The second thread starts in Washington. From Tennessee mules to Stinger missiles, America has provided critical military support to the Afghan resistance movements. The policy began under Jimmy Carter and was continued by Ronald Reagan, with Congress insisting on an increased flow of aid.

The Reagan administration also deserves some credit for the prospect of a cease-fire between Iran and Iraq. And in Angola, Cambodia and Nicaragua, peace processes have also begun on terms which are close to has sought the withdrawal of Cuba's troops flicts brought suddenly closer to peaceful from Angola and South Africa's from Naresolution. In the Middle East, Asia, Africa mibia. Those two goals at last seem within reach. In Cambodia, both America and China have supported a rebel coalition that includes the Khmer Rouge army of the mass murderer, Pol Pot. A process begun. last week in Indonesia may one day lead to an acceptable outcome — withdrawal of Vietnamese troops, and a successor government that excludes the Khmer Rouge. In Nicaragua, the Reagan administration has sought an impossible goal, overthrow of the Sandinista government, and has consis-tently failed to pursue a diplomatic alternative to warfare by the contras. Initiative therefore passed to Congress; its reluctance to fund the contras put steam in the peace plan of President Oscar Arias of Costa Rice.

There is a third thread that deserves note: cooperation between Moscow and Washington. Both sides have supported Iraq. Moscow apparently leaned on Cuba to attend the Angola talks and on Vietnam to loosen its position on Cambodia.

In none of the five wars has peace been attained, and each case remains fragile. The tracis are trying to improve their bargaining position on the battlefield; even when Soviet troops are gone, Afghanistan faces internal chaos. But in all five cases a serious process of negotiation has at least begun. In comtnes where for years poison gas left soldiers pasping to death, as in Iran and Iraq, and land mines left a generation of one-legged children, as in Angola, there is finally hope.

Iran and the Hostages

The U.S. government is tied in a knot in Iran has two sorts of assets in American the matter of getting back the nine Ameri-can hostages who are held by friends of stocks that the shah bought and that the Iran. From a fear of being accused of paying "ransom" and of otherwise stirring nothing doing. But if it is referring to finanmemories of its past arms-for-hostages dealings with Tehran, Washington is reportedly holding back from a proposed deal in which, in return for the nine, the United States would free up Iran's frozen assets.

Good. Washington should be holding back. It was readiness to bargain for hostages that brought the Reagan administration the succession of griefs and policy disasters known as the Iran-contra affair. Paying for hostages gives hostage takers incentive to take more, and warps policy. Tehran brought about the release of some hostages, but as the payment in arms rolled in its clients kept kidnapping new ones. The administration was secretly supplying arms even while U.S. officials were publicly trying to orga-nize an embargo to force this war-bent terrorist state to accept a cease-fire. The resulting self-generated pressure on the U.S. government to keep the transaction secret inflicted its own deep wounds.

This does not mean that nothing can be done to relieve the ordeal of the hostages.

United States impounded, then there can be cial assets, that is another story. There al-ready are accepted international procedures working, at The Hague, to sort out claims. With no loss of interest or honor and conceivably with some benefit to the hostages, the pace of processing could be stepped up.
In any event, it is bound to matter that the overall situation is changing. Iran does not seem to be seeking anymore to press a war that the United States wants to see settled. On the contrary, it says it wants a cease-fire, and it has accepted the United Nations resohition designed to bring one about. In the context of progress toward the abiding and valid goals of American policy — a cease-fire and prompt fulfillment of the terms of the United Nations resolution, improved relations between Iran and its neighbors and an end to Iranian-sponsored terrorism — the release of the hostages falls naturally into place. Meanwhile, every day that they continue to be held, Iran demonstrates a cruelty that Americans note and remember.

Burma's Way to Nowhere

Burma for decades tried to find safety foot doctors and no anesthetics, of educa-and prosperity by shutting out the world, tion and finance ministers who shun interbut without success. It displays instead many familiar Third World ills that cannot plausibly be blamed on outsiders. Although blessed with resources and a lively, friendly people. Burma has sunk to the world's list of 10 poorest countries. So dismal is its militarized regime's record that its leader for 26 years, U Ne Win, not only resigned last Monday but, creditably, urged a referendum on continued one-party rule.

A decision has been taken in what is now standard Burmese fashion: a secret conclave of a non-elected party congress. Surprisingly, and sadly, the Burma Socialist Program Party rebelled against its outgoing leader and refused to submit itself to popular judgment. It chose instead to replace U Ne Win with another strongman, U Sein Lwin, a retired general whose talents run to riot control and head-cracking.

It is as though poor Burma were trapped in a bitter novel by the Third World's laureate of disillusion, V.S. Naipaul. Recent visitors tell of Burmese hospitals with bare-views for fear of exposing their ignorance.

After seizing power in 1962, U Ne Win never once submitted himself to press questioning. And all this was part and parcel of what a privileged ruling elite liked to call "the Burmese way to socialism."

Yet Burma was once a major rice and oil exporter, its future seemingly assured when it gained independence in 1948. Its name was briefly a byword for nonalignment, for high-minded statesmen like U Nu and U Thant and the ideals of newly independent states meeting at Bandung.

That moment passed quickly. Unable to quell widespread insurgencies, civilians gave way to soldiers, the shunning of foreigners and repressive one-party rule. The result has been decline and decay. This is the failed system that U Sein Lwin presumably wants to perpetuate. The least that well-wishing outsiders can do is to keep alive U Ne Win's parting appeal that Burma's people finally be permitted to judge their masters.

Euphoria Is Out of Order

As long as the American economy keeps growing steadily, it is very hard to persuade people that anything really needs to be fixed. Alan Greenspan, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, made the point recently and went on to say: "That could very readily lead to a degree of euphoria and an unwillingness to come to grips with difficult problems." There he is describing the presidential campaign. He has made it his business to introduce a note of reality into, particularly, his own Republican Party's celebration.

The economy, he is telling Congress, has to be slowed down. He thinks that the Federal Reserve has already pushed interest rates up far enough to do it. But the unspoken promise is that if there is no deceleration soon, rates will have to go higher.

The immediate and obvious reason is to restrain inflation. But it is also essential to get the trade deficit down. To live in the style to which it has become accustomed. America needs to borrow $160 billion a year from foreigners. In the last five years Americans the rest of the world. As Mr. Greenspan observes, no country has limitless credit. As time passes and the foreign lenders watch that debt continue to mount faster than the American ability to service it, the lenders will begin to charge higher interest. Or demand a cheaper dollar. Or both, Simply to let matters take their course would be, for the United States, exceedingly unwise. Higher interest rates would reduce business investment at a time when American industry is already beginning to strain to fill the export orders that are essential to get trade back into balance. A lower exchange rate would aggravate an inflation rate that has already risen disquietingly this year.

A modest slowdown now, during this campaign summer, is necessary to avoid serious damage later. No candidate is eager to dwell on the subject, in this season of sunshine. To his great credit, Mr. Greenspan has made himself the spokesman for anti-emphoria

After Iran-Iraq: Next Watch for an Islamic Comeback

P ARIS — It is expected in the West that when the Gulf war does end, things will return to "normal." But what is normal? There is a new norm. The Gulf war, the Afghanistan war - these are making a new normality, that of restored Islamic power and confidence. That means power to set-tle their own affairs and deal from strength with the non-Islamic world.

The events of the last eight years in the Gulf region and in Afghanistan have been very significant. The Afghans defeated a superpower — a geographically adjacent superpower, at that, with a history of interventions in Afghanistan. The Iranians and the Iraqis fought one another to a standstill, but with a ferocity and skilled Asians have seen a recovery of political independence. That is what is happening in the Islamic world -the recovery of a employment of high technology that nobody expected of them.

Iran has done more than that. It ejected the United States from Iran in 1979, humiliating the Carter adminis-ration. It did the same thing to the Reagan administration in the Irangate affair. The Iranians have employed terror and terrorist blackmail against Western powers in ways to which the West has failed to find an answer.

The Iranians are now saying that in the Gulf they have been fighting the United States as well as Iraq, and that this is the only reason why they lost. The United States, they say, having shot down one civilian airliner, was preparing new atrocities." They are yielding — to the United Nations, not Iraq — only because of that. It is a claim which Washington, ironically crough, has been auxious to confirm, suggesting to anyone who will listen that the U.S. Navy really won the war. It is important to understand that Iranians, Iraqis and Afghans are not ending these wars chastened, in a mood of lessons learned. They are proud and defiant, confident that they have proved themselves in these ordeals, as indeed they have. They intend to continue to make their national wills felt. This is a big change in what might be described as the psychological balance of world power.

By William Pfaff

From the time of the Ottoman Empire's decline and the rise of industrialism and modern technology in the West, the Islamic societies lost their grip on what was happening to them. They lost their relevance to the world. Things were done to Persia, Afghanistan, the Arab countries. They did not do things to others.

A psychology of victimization developed, and it was particularly marked in Iran. Even as the revolution took place at the end of the 1970s, young Iranians abroad would not concede that Iranians bore any responsibility for the shah and for what his government had done to the country. The United States had done it all. The shah was a puppet. All the people who governed with him were puppets. SAVAK torturers were puppets. And before the United States it had been Britain that controlled every detail of what happened in Iran. Those young Iranians could not grasp that by saying this they re-vealed exactly that moral abdication, that spirit of capitulation to the West, which their revolution was supposed to be condemning. Now it is different in Iran.

In the recent past the Arab world, Egypt and the Maghreb did more to re-establish the autonomy of their

L which aborted, but then the socalled Arab renaissance among intellectuals, and the launching of such secular political movements as the Ba'ath socialist party, which in two of its latter-day manifestations goverus Syria and Iraq today.

There were revolutionary initiatives, largely unsuccessful until Colo-nel Gamal Abdel Nasser deposed Egypt's King Farouk in 1952. A few years later the Algerians' insurrection convinced France to quit Algeria. In 1973, Egypt proved that it could take the military initiative against Israel The Arab states found how to use the economic weapon of their oil.

We are today seeing the culmina-tion of this process, by which the Islamic societies are recovering their ability to act on the international stage - act in their own ways, and with considerable effect.

They are following what earlier was accomplished in Asia. There, while the

was the Arab revolt in the World War 19th century by disciplined modernization of their own society, the rest of Asia fell into colonial or semi-colonial subordination until the early and mid-20th century. Then revolutions fol-lowed one another in China, India, Indonesia and Indochina — and the Western powers, one after another abandoned the attempt to control events. It was a recovery of political independence, but also, more importantly, of moral autonomy. That is what is happening in the Islamic world — the recovery of a civilization which, after all, was until the late Middle Ages politically and militarily superior to western Europe, and which ruled southeastern Europe as its colony until a hundred years ago.

The return of the Islamic world implies major changes in international affairs. The implications are as yet scarcely imagined by the Western governments, or in Jerusalem — or even in the Islamic capitals themselves. International Herald Tribune.

Now That the World Wants Peace, Try to Make It Last

PARIS — At last there are prospects for ending the bloody Iran-Iraq war, which started nearly darity provoked by foreign attack.

Iraq could not win a long war nine years ago. If a cease-fire can be achieved, followed by peace negotiations, the fighting could stop on the one basis that practically everybody except the combatants required: victors for neither side. tory for neither side. One reason the war has been going on so long is that the rest of the world did not want Iran or Iraq to win. Iraq's surprise invasion in 1979 against a much more populous, oilrich Iran. When the Iranians pulled themselves together, they not only expelled the Iraqis but advanced to the point where the regime of President Saddam Hussein was threatened. Syria's president, Hafez al-Assad, went to the aid of Iran by closing the Syrian-Iraqi border, cutting off most of Iraq's oil exports until pipelines could be built. Iraq's narrow to the Calif chiesing lengt were brought important initial successes. But it was a grave miscalculation, access to the Gulf shipping lanes was made unusable by Iran's advance. rallying Iranian patriotism despite the chaos and hatreds unleashed by That brought new aid to Iraq, not only from Saudi Arabia and other the mullahs' revolution. Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini might have been gone by now, and quite possibly Iran might have settled down from its travail, were it not for the national soli-

Arab Gulf states but also from the Soviet Union, France and others. Islamic fundamentalism was rising everywhere in response to the Iranian revolution, and the possibility of a triumph by Iran was seen by virtually all powers as a disaster to be avoided.

The war dragged on, with support flowing to both sides, often from the same countries. Iran bled itself with "human wave" offensives. Iraq shifted strategy, using banned chemical weapons to block Iran's advances and bornbardment of its shipping and cities to wear down its economy and morale.

When Iran began to retaliate against Kuwait, the United States sent warships to keep lanes open, except for Iran. That started as a hodgepodge operation, but gradually it was coor-dinated with European allies. Iran's isolation was dramatically displayed when the UN Security Council re-fused to condemn the United States for shooting down a civilian plane that it took for an attacker.

There are no clear grounds for Washington's claim that its policy finally served to convince Iran that it could not bring down the Baghdad regime. It may be a pernicious illusion that would undermine further policy decisions needed now to prevent another reversal of the pendulum and continuation of the war.

Certainly, Iran has reached a point of economic and human exhaustion. A battle of succession to Ayatollah Khomeini has yet to be resolved. These are factors in Iran's decision to accept a cease-fire, but now Iraq is seeking to stiffen terms that it previously accepted. It is using the Mujahidin Khalo, a group of ultra-radical, anti-Khomeini criles and ex-prisoners of war organized in Iraq as a "liberation acmy," to press what it considers newly won advantage against a faltering Iran. So this is the time for outside states to insist on their original goal of end-ing the war without defeat for either side. The key is Sandi Arabia, which has bankrolled Iraq but has also to fear a decisive success for the now well equipped Iraqi army.

When Iraq tried to take over Kuwait in 1973, Saudi Arabia correctly saw it as a serious threat. The energy gence of Iraq as the strongest Gulf power would endanger all states in the region, including Israel. The Saudis, the United States, the Soviets and others must now use their influence to convince Baghdad that it cannot afford to miss this chance for peace. Even so, the course of the war has not only devastated the people of both countries, it has brought the whole region to a much more sophisticated, dangerous level of armaments. Iraq has a point in demanding that a cease-fine not become just a pause to restore forces. And Iran's need for a bit of face-saving should be understood. It is trying to preserve its revolution, a goal that no one else can share, but the war has only served to bolster the extremists. It is the task of reconstruction that can give moderates a chance. The peace effort should include an attempt to reverse the regional arms race. Washington and Moscow can talk about that and find common in-terest. Ending this war needs to be done in a way to help prevent future wars in a volatile, angry, fearful and overarmed area. That is the one kind of victory that would serve all.

The Butchery in Mozambique Must Be Stopped Many saw them murdered. Many were saved by death, largely without international awareness. This suffering reflects a dimension of apart-heid that extends beyond South Africa's borders. As reports of mass atrocities and fleeing refugees filter out of Mozambique, experts on the region are blaming a South African-backed guerrilla organization called Renamo for the tragedy.

Renamo's attacks are part of a vicious campaign by South Africa to weaken its neighbors. The U.S. State Department conservatively estimates that 100,000 civilians have been murdered in the last two years, and that more than a million more have been driven into refugee camps outside Mozambique as a result of Renamo violence.

At a Unicef symposium in Zimbabwe in March, I was invited by Mrs. Graça Machel, widow of President Samora Machel, to visit Mo-zambique with Unicer's special representative, Harry Belafonte, to observe what was happening, especially to the children. Today, four months later, the terror continues.

Cambodia, the Holocaust and the Armenian genocide. Warfare and homelessness have become a way of life in Mozambique. There is no vaccine to protect the children against the bullets and ma-chetes of the anti-government Renamo forces.

By Matilda R. Cuomo

As a result of the war, the infant and child mortality rates are among the world's highest. One in three children dies before the age of 5. Our first stop was Lhangene Center, a former Roman Catholic school for priests that has become a home for traumatized and orphaned children. One 12-year-old boy, in a near catatonic state, described the terror he felt when his village was raided. The guerrillas handed him a machine gun and told him he would have to learn to use it. To test his will, they told him he would have to shoot his parents or face being shot. He obeyed the orders and killed them. Initiated, he became the gnerrillas' prisoner until escaping.

Another tranmatized boy told how his father, a member of the village militia, was murdered during a pre-dawn raid. The gnerrillas wanted information on other militia members that the boy could not provide. So they mutilated him, chopping off one finger at a time, pausing each of fingers on one hand, they cut off an ear.

Unicel reports that 250,000 children have been physically maimed, psychologically scarred or or-phaned by Renamo's violence. Many do not know parents who sacrificed themselves as decoys dur-ing raids so that the children could flee. Many were trained to kill, forced to fire on friends and relatives and can never remm to their villages.

We visited Morrombala, a camp for 30,000 refugees. In sweltering heat, men and women told about guerrilla plundering of their villages. The raped women, mutilated and killed savage by destroyed exhaults and health aliming state. ly, destroyed schools and health clinics, stole crops, tin off roofs and personal belongings.

Ten thousand children in the camp had no books, paper or pencils and only five teachers.
Elsewhere in the country, rebel attacks have left 500,000 children without schools to attend.

In a hospital in Quelimane, the sheets were dirty. There was little medicine. Among the men and women there were many wounded children. Children in wheelchairs, paralyzed by bullets. Children with missing limbs, the victims of machetes. Children bearing the weight of crude, wooden prostheses. Listless children, in their mothers' arms, suffering from malnutrition.

The Economic Issue: Americans Need Political Leadership political realities to accommodate new economic realities. Mr. Carter did not burden was as high — at 19.4 percent of GNP — as in Jimmy Carter's last

WASHINGTON — When Michael Dukakis says that this presidential election is about competence, not ideology, he has it backward. Call it ideology, philosophy, whatever: In the broadest sense, the next president's job is to redefine what government can and should do - and what it can't or shouldn't. "Tough choices," Mr. Dukakis has said, lie ahead.

Thinking about government, most Americans are muddled. Budget deficits reflect a persisting gap between the public's demand for government services and its willingness to be taxed.
Bridging that gap requires more than a budget plan. It requires a changed political climate: a public willing to nd spending programs that are ineffective or do not serve vital national needs, and a recognition that what is left - and any new programs - must be covered by higher taxes. Mr. Dukakis is right that the terms "liberal" and "conservative" are largely irrelevant. They are relics of the New Deal and symbolize settled arguments for the three-quarters of Americans born after 1940. Few Americans would dismantle Big Government — everything from Medicare to national parks. In that sense, liberalism has triumphed. But most Americans reccenize that Big Government's powers and resources are limited. In that sense, conservatism remains strong. The trouble is that getting elected and then governing demand different messages. At the Democratic convention, Mr. Dukakis delivered a spectacular speech. He sounded uplifting themes of national renewal. He looked presidential. He radiated confidence. But there were no warnings of "tough choices." Precisely the opposite: He made new promises. He would create national health insurance, expand "affordable" housing and support more day care. He embraced a balanced budget without mentioning taxes. These inconsistencies are so common that no one calls them by their proper name: dishonest. George Bush, too, is a model of ambiguity and contradiction. He would deal with the budget through a "flexible freeze" on spending; that is a plan of stunning vagueness. In addition, he favors tax cuts. Few political leaders of either party talk realistically of choices. (Jesse Jackson is an exception, although most Americans probably do not support his priorities.) No one wants to offend the muddled majority. This may work now. It won't next February.

Summertime Blues Likely To Slow Market in August

By CARL GEWIRTZ

International Herald Tribuni ARIS — The summer doldrums are expected to substantially slow activity in the international capital market this month. The height of the vacation season comes at a time when interest rates still are moving upward and currency rates still are very uncertain — all of which will deter investors from making new commitments.

The best the market has going for it is a relatively heavy flow of interest and principal repayments scheduled for September and October, when $12.5 billion in payments will be available for

Issuers seeking to tap into these flows may be tempted to start offering securities before the end of this month to establish an early foothold before the traditional autumn crowd starts to form. The signal for the rush to begin could be sounded at midmonth, when Washington is to report the size of the June U.S. trade deficit. Another favorable number could have a big impact, attracting investors into dollardenominated securities.

Since bond markets are currently driven by developments in the foreign exchange market, the big question is where the dollar is headed. Last week, despite continuing concerted central bank intervention, the dollar again appeared headed to testing its recent highs, and analysts were uncertain whether it is now locked into a narrow trading range or poised for a dramatic move.

One factor that makes analysts cautious is the coming climax to the West German tourist season. The vacation period for North Rhine-Westphalia, Germany's most populous state, ends Aug. 15. For Roland Scharf at Hessische Landesbank, that will signal "the end of the annual hemorrhage."

In last year's third quarter, West Germans spent 16 billion Deutsche marks ($30 million at the current exchange rate) on tourism. And as West Germany is considered undeveloped regarding the use of credit cards, the necessary foreign exchange is often purchased before tourists leave for vacation. All of this means that within two weeks the Bundesbank's intervention to support the mark could become a lot more effective than it has been because it will no longer have to fight the enormous sales pressure from tourists.

NOTHER factor analysts worry about is the U.S. presidential election in November. So far, it has been overlooked in the foreign exchange market, but, as the campaign heats up, incantious comments by the candidates could cause foreign investors to take fright

But the consensus view is that between now and November, Washington will do its best to maintain a stable to strong dollar. Analysts believe that the Federal Reserve Board will offset any threat of the dollar's weakening by using that opportunity to snug up interest rates. That would make dollar-denominated investments relatively more attractive and reassure foreigners of the vigilance to keep inflation under control.

The Fed has ample reason to raise rates. Last week's economic data showed a very sharp increase in orders for durable goods and a big rise in consumer spending in June and continued rapid overall growth in the second quarter.

But apart from an expected 4- to 4-point increase in West

Germany's money market rate, signaled by last week's hike in the Lombard rate, analysis expect the leading central banks to move into neutral until November so as to avoid destabilizing financial markets ahead of the election.

Analysts are not prepared to look beyond year-end, since the economic policy of the new president is still an unknown. Many academics in the United States are urging whoever is elected to quickly implement tax increases to cut the budget deficit and get the pain over before the congressional elections two years later.

Convincing action on the budget deficit could radically improve the outlook for the dollar, whereas no action could reawaken fears that the dollar rally this year simply worsened the U.S. capacity to deal with its international trade and current-account How bond-market investors deal with these uncertainties is still anybody's guess. At present, there is no appetite for bonds. Money available for investment is placed short term, on deposit with banks or used to purchase commercial paper.

This is the classic environment for floating-rate instruments, whose periodic coupon resettings offer the best protection against further rises in interest rates.

The British pound is especially attractive in this regard since the currency is still buoyed by high interest rates and expectations of further increases. In addition, the government's anti-inflation squeeze has caused the yield curve to invert — putting shortest-dated rates higher than longer term money. Little surprise, then, that three sterling floaters emerged last week totaling £335

Pact Eases Payments For Brazil

Paris Club Accord Covers $5 Billion

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches PARIS — Brazil and foreign government creditors have signed an accord rescheduling nearly $5 billion in debt with a five-year grace period, spokesmen said.

In Brasilia, Finance Minister Mailson Ferreira da Nobrega of Brazil said the agreement, reached Saturday with 13 creditors in the socalled Paris Club of government lenders, provided for his country to pay back $3.856 billion in principal plus $1.136 billion in interest over 10 years with a five-year grace period.

Observers said it was unusual for rescheduling arrangements by the Paris Club to include interest as well as principal. "This is the best and most ample accord that Brazil or any other Latin American country has ever signed with the Paris Club," Mr. Nobrega said.

Brazil had been up to date in interest payments to the Paris Club when it signed the accord.

NEW YORK - Soviet institutions have issued their first Western credit cards, and the premier of television advertising to promote such capitalist tools is scheduled for Monday.

Mastercard International of New York said on Saturday that its Eurocard-Mastercard was issued by the official Bank for Foreign Economic Affairs, nown in Russian as Vnesheconombank, to Yu S. Moskovsky, chairman of the institution.

On Friday, the first Visa card, called SovCard, was issued to Yuri Titov, secretary of the Soviet Olympic Committee, said Dan Brigham a Visa international spokesman in San Francisco. The card was issued by Intourist, the Soviet company for foreign travel.

Mr. Titov said in a prepared statement released by Visa that he had declared Visa the "official credit card" of the 1988 Soviet Olympic Team.

An Intourist spokesman predicted SovCards soon would be available to the general population. A 75-second MasterCard commercial is scheduled to air Monday during the popular Soviet news program, "Vremya," according to Howard Pulchin, a MasterCard spokesman in New York. The so-called "Gold Card" eventually will be widely available in the Soviet Union, he said.

Mr. Pulchin said MasterCard would "like to the number of customers in the millions."

Intourist joined Visa as a card-issuing member in January. It issued the card through Speregatel-nybank, a Soviet bank with sole responsibility for consumer banking, Mr. Brigham said.

Mikhail Misko, director of Intourist's credit card program, said in the statement, that he is working with Okobank, the Finnish cooperative bank, to "establish the systems necessary for our Visa card to be accepted worldwide."

Credit cards have been accepted in the Soviet Union for about 15 years at Intourist shops for foreign visitors, and Vnesheconombank started a cash service for Eurocard and MasterCard holders

A small number of Soviet citizens —most prom-inently Raisa Gorbachev, the wife of Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev —have carried charge cards such as American Express and Diners Club. But those cards are not issued by banks and do not extend credit to cardholders. (AP, UPI, AFP)

NEW YORK -- The U.S. economy kept growing in July although the pace slowed slightly from the previous month, according to a survey of corporate purchasing managers for release Monday.

The National Association of Purchasing Management, which conducts a monthly survey of economic trends at more than 250 industrial companies, said its index of growth slipped to 59 percent in July from 59.3 percent in June.

A reading above 50 percent indicates the economy is expanding, while levels below that point generally show the economy is contract-

Production growth slowed in July, although new orders expand-

"The vigorous increase in new orders, undoubtedly fueled by the surge in export orders, is impressive and signals continued robust economic growth for the balance of the third quarter," said Robert J. Bretz, chairman of the group's business survey committee.

Among the purchasing managers surveyed, 31 percent indicated their new orders had expanded, compared with 34 percent in June, while 12 percent said their rate of new orders was worse, the same as Of the 70 percent of the group's members that export, 39 percent eported higher export orders during July, up from 38 percent in June, while only 3 percent said export orders were worse, the same as in the previous month. Production slowed for 13 percent of the companies, compared with 12 percent in June, and increased for 25 percent, down sharply from 35 percent in June.

Inventories grew rapidly, with 22 percent of the purchasing managers reporting higher inventories, compared with 18 percent the previous month, and 18 percent reporting lower inventories, compared with 22 percent in June. The group said that accounting for normal seasonal variations, the rate of inventory increase was the greatest since July 1984.

"Some of the increase in inventory may be attributed to receiving products earlier than required from suppliers who closed their plants for vacation and maintenance and as a hedge against the significant number of price increases that went into effect July 1," the group stat-

Central American Nations Seek $4 Billion in Aid Plan

United Press International GUATEMALA CITY - The five Central American vice presidents have agreed to propose a plan to the European Community and the United Nations that would generate about $4 billion for region's depressed economies. This plan is a Central American initiative that will have important repercussions for modern international relations," said Vice President Robert Carpio of Guatemala on Friday as he closed a two-day meeting attended by the region's the EC and United Nations.

The vice presidents, from Nica-ragua, El Salvador, Honduras, Costa Rica and Guatemala, called the conference to plan for regional economic integration.

Mr. Carpio said that Central American ministers of industry and agriculture, as well as officials from the Ministry of Central American Integration, known as SIECA, also met this week to help formulate the plan but he gave no specifics. Mr. Carpio said the plan includes strategies for "the recovery and development of the regional econovice presidents and officials from mies. And the help of international organizations is indispensable."

assure repayment after 20 years. Williams therefore will own the zeroes and lenders will have immediate access to that security if Williams is forced into default because Banamex suspends paying interest on its floating-rate notes. This also contrasts with the recent operation for the Mexican government, where the zeroes are held in custody by the U.S. Federal Reserve System and are not available to creditors

The subordination of the notes Banamex will sell to Williams will provide substantial additional benefit to the bank since, for regulatory purposes at home, such paper can be counted in the ratio it has to maintain against foreign-currency prior to maturity under any cir-

In exchange for all this, lending banks will receive 20-year notes from Williams paying ¼ point over Libor. The coupon does not represent a significant gain over what Banamex pays on existing interbank lines. The advantage lies in the assurance of repayment after 20 years, the fact that the debt can be carried on lenders' books at face value - the obligor is based in the Cayman Islands — rather than having to be written down as much Mexican debt is, and the likelihood that the lenders can sell the debt if they choose to do so.

Floating-rate notes are tradeable instruments whereas interbank commitments are not. In addition, the backing of the zero-coupon bonds means an enhanced market

Currently, Mexican debt trades at about 51 percent of face value. The 16 percent of face value that will go to purchase the zeroes would give an immediate market value to the floaters of at least 67, ous offering from Rhône-Poulenc. Officials at the European Commission in Brussels said the tax advantage allowed in these deals giving issuers the right to deduct as an interest expense part of the principal repayment, which is normally not tax deductible — is not a direct subsidy from the state and therefore not subject to review or comment from the commission. Officials at state-owned Air France acknowledged last week that the company is looking at the possibility of increasing its capital using the same formula. But a spokesman insisted that no decision has yet been made, nor is it possible to put a number on how much money the airline might seek.

In the loan market, National Home Loans Corp. of Britain is seeking a five-year revolving credit of $90 million from banks in Asia. The loan, bearing a margin of % point over Libor, is being syndicated to regional banks in Japan as well as in South Korea and Taiwan in an effort by the company to widen and diversity its credit sources. Citicorp and Bank of Tokyo are arranging the placement.

Chemical Bank announced last week it is syndicating a $210 million credit as part of the financine related to Television South's pur-chase of MTM Entertainment. The bank loan consists of $80 million to finance the takeover and the assumption of a $130 million loan outstanding to a subsidiary of the television production company.

Japanese officials argue European Commission in Brussels, the EC's executive body. If the deficit were to rise again, he warned, there would be "political repercussions" in European countries.

The community accepts that exchange rate movements are a major reason for the faster decline in the Japanese deficit with the United States than with Europe. From February 1985 to last month, officials pointed out, the yen rose by 105 percent against the dollar, compared with only 17 percent against the ECU, making Japanese goods much more expensive in the United States than in Europe. The economic consequence is that the EC market is more sexy from the point of view of profit-ability than the U.S. market," said one European official.

"We don't believe there's a problem if the Europeans are vigilant," said Alfred H. Kingon, the U.S. ambassador to the EC. Equally, he said, "we have no problem if the Enropeans export whatever they want to Japan."
EC officials, however, complain

"Once we have the world's biggest single market, the Japanese will just have to take notice," an EC official said.

In dealing with Japan, "it's a question of muscle," Mr. Kingon said. "It always has been. When opening up of the European market will benefit other countries as much community will have enormous market in 1992. It will be treated with a different kind of respect.

exploit it to its fullest extent." Improved ties with Europe — and the notion of a trilateral alliance among the United States, Europe and Japan - have been constant themes in Japanese political and intellectual circles for more than a decade. Underlying these ideas in recent years has been a perception of the United States as a less reliable ally and a less tolerant trading partner.

But while the European theme is not new in Tokyo, it has been pur-sued with markedly increased vigor under Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita, Japanese and Western analysts say. In effect, Europe's unification and the dramatic rise in the yen's value are adding substance to what had been one of many policy concepts in Tokyo that are long on talk and short on content.

Market unification and its impact on Japan-EC relations was a central issue during Mr. Takeshita's two trips to European capitals this spring. In interviews, Japanese officials now stress the importance of a bilateral committee Mr. Takeshita agreed to establish to monitor the EC's integration process before and after 1992.

Similarly, a dramatic increase in Japanese investment in Europe last year reflects both the optimism and anxiety of Japanese manufacturers, executives and officials say. In part Japanese businesses are eager to take advantage of opportunities afforded by a unified market with no internal boundaries; but they are also concerned that investment may be more difficult after 1992.

The main idea is to be on the of unification be open to foreign discussed under the Uruguay by developments among EC nainside, and the Japanese will pur-companies or will they, as Europe-Round of unitilateral trade talks.

S. Africa Says Fans Barred From Seoul

JOHANESBURG (UPI) — South African spectators have been banned from attending the Olympic Games in Seoul, government sports officials said Sunday.

Dennis MacIldowie, the national Olympic committee's deputy director, said that travel agents and an international sports federation, which he declined to name, told him of the ban for the Sept. 17-Oct. 2 Games in Secul. He said he assumed the ban had been approved by the International Olympic Committee.

South Africa has been barred from Olympic participation since 1960 because of its apartheli racial policies; South African spectators were barred from the 1968 Games in Mexico City.

"We've been told by travel agents that no visas have been granted, and one of the major sporting bodies told us that South Africans will not be allowed into South Korea during Games," MacIldowie said.

U.S. Pro Soccer Gets 3-Tiered Program

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - The U.S. Soccer Federation on Saturday unanimously approved a three-tiered plan to build the foundation for a major professional league by the early 1990s and to prepare the national team for World Cup play. The United States, which has not made the cup finals since 1950, will get an automatic berth in 1994 as the host team. The structure would comprise:

● A 32-team professional league whose teams would play a year-round schedule of between 40 and 60 games, including contests against teams from Europe and South America.

• Four eight-team semipro leagues that would emphasize regional play; there currently are such leagues on both coasts. • Eight 12-team subregional amateur leagues in traditional soccer areas around the country. "As soon as we get the bottom level established and the middle level going," said Werner Fricker, president of the USSF, "we can work on getting a professional league in operation. I'd like to see all three levels in place by 1992 or 1993." The North American Soccer League, the last nationwide pro league, folded in 1985. Fricker said the program's goal is to establish the framework for developing U.S. soccer players who can successfully compete at the world level.

Cup Series Moved to Early September

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — The San Diego Yacht Club and Mercury Bay Boating Club of New Zealand agreed late Friday to begin the America's Cup races in early September to avoid competing with the Olympic

It was the first agreement between the two sides since New Zealand last summer issued its challenge to face the Americans in a 90-foot (27.43-meter) waterline yacht. The SDYC will counter with a catamaran that is less than half that size but most observers expect it to be much faster.

The New York State Supreme Court last week ended a cycle of lawsuits by ordering the races for Sept. 19, unless the two sides could agree on another date. The two-of-three-race series is now set for Sept. 7. 9 and 11; the Summer Games will beheld in Seoul from Sept. 17-Oct. 2.

3 Tied for Lead in U.S. Golf Tourney

GRAND BLANC, Michigan (AP) - Howard Twitty bogeyed the final hole Saturday to move into a three-way tie with Steve Elkington and Scott Verplank after three rounds of the Buick Open golf tournament. Elkington, a 26-year-old Australian who started the day three strokes behind leader Verplank and one in back of Twitty, shot a 5-under-par 67 and was tied at 14-under-par 202 with Twitty, who had a 68, and Verplank, who shot a 70 after firing 66s in his first two rounds.

box office appeal than most.

NEW YORK — The horseplayers of Bel-mont Park, never exactly a cheerful lot, are even more sour than usual these days. With particular urgency, they have been counting the hours until Saratoga opens Wednesday. The Belmont meeting, with Saturday its 70th of 72 days, has been with them too long.

July afternoons at Belmont are always the dog days of the season, as bleak in their own way as blustery February programs on the Aqueduct winter track. It is a time of hiatus, between the Belmont Stakes and the Travers, between the first half of the season, which ends with the Triple Crown, and the second, which begins in Saratoga.

This year, the wait seemed endless, mostly because of the violent swing of the weather, from drought to storms. First the dirt track and the turf courses became unusually hard and dry. Then the grass was so thoroughly drenched that grass racing had to be canceled; Saturday's Sword Dancer Handicap was the first grass race run in New York since July 18.

The problem is that when grass races are canceled, they are switched to the main track, a surface on which many of the entrants cannot perform terribly well. Most are scratched, leaving fields of four or five to contest races at unusually long distances. There is no drearier sight than that of four cheap horses struggling to negotiate 11 furlongs on a sweltering afternoon.

The steady diet of these mind-numbing events would have been more palatable if spiced with even a bit of top-notch racing, but that has been in short supply as well. Trainers have been keeping their good horses in the barn, waiting for steadier weather and Saratoga, and the fields for the best stakes races have been terribly slim for the last month. Only four horses ran in the Tom Fool and the Brooklyn Handicaps, and just five turned out for the Suburban.

Officials of the New York Racing Association have acknowledged that the sport has been dismal of late, but say that controlling off to stud. Forty Niner, Seeking the Gold and Private Terms, who met in Saturday's Haskell Handicap at Monmouth, New Jersey (Derby runner-up Forty Niner outlasted Seeking the Gold by a nose) are the leading Travers candidates. They are nice enough horses, but all were regularly beaten by Risen Star. Nor is there an inspiring late-bloomer on the horizon.

It may take the women and children of the equine world to provide the most excitement this year at Saratoga. The likeliest stars of the meeting are Personal Ensign and Houston. Personal Ensign, the 4-year-old filly who is undefeated in nine starts, will race against males for the first time in the Whitney Handicap on Aug. 6. ### ■ Jackson Retains Title

Julian Jackson of the Virgin 1slands dropped former champion Buster Drayton of Philadelphia flat on his back with a left hook Saturday to retain his WBA junior midweight title on a knockout with three seconds left in the third round, United Press International reported from Atlantic City.

Jackson had knocked down Drayton with a right to the chin in the second round, but the challenger rallied late in the second and early third rounds. Jackson is 34-1 with 31 knockouts, Drayton is 36-11-1. Both weighed 153 pounds.

Drayton opened the third by pelting Jackson to the head. But with about a minute left in the round, Jackson found the range with hard rights to the head and body. He backed up Drayton, then caught him with a left hook on the jaw. Drayton toppled backward and the doctors jumped into the ring. signaling an end, as referee Tony

Of all kinds of museums, art museums show an exceptional growth rate but they are notably acking in ideas. Hudson says: Truly pioneering art museums are very few. You get new art museums but they're still doing the same old things."

The Musée d'Orsay he regards as a big French flag to wave at the world. Like James Stirling's Stuttgart museum it is the victory of packaging over content. "The director of the Stuttgart museum told me they didn't have a public relations or promotion budget because they didn't need it, the building did that for them. People come and see the building, it's the hait on the hook, and then they go inside. But inside they're not doing anything new at all."

In the last 30 years, Hudson says, there have been only two radically new art museums in Europe: the David d'Angers Gallery in Angers, France, and the Ruskin Gallery in Sheffield, England. They're both radically new. The others just put pictures on walls."

Both museums figure in the last chapter, "Pointers to the Future." of Hudson's latest book, "Museums of Influence" (published by Cambridge University Press). Both give what Hudson calls in-

Other museums that he considers pointers to the future are Anacostia, a controversial neighborhood museum set up in 1967 in a black district of Washington. D.C.: Tacubaya, a sort of combination mission and museum in a slum in Mexico City: the Brooklyn Children's Museum; two museums in Switzerland (the Sarganserland Museum in Sargans and Lucerne's Postal Museum); and the Sukuma Museum in Tanzania, which was founded in the 1950s and is devoted to preserving and encouraging the culture of the Sukuma, Tanzania's largest

Of the 37 museums in 13 countries that Hudson has chosen as "museums of influence," the Su-kuma is the only one in Africa. There are none in the Middle East or Asia, although were the book to be redone in 10 years Hudson thinks one or two Japanese muse-ums would be included. "All museums in Britain then had to be in the classical style with a huge portico and they all had to have the same complicated staffing structure, with all those keepers and curators, when what needed was a more flexible and less expensive system. So we've really been a very bad influence," the director said.

Because a museum was of influence, Hudson said, this does not mean that its influence persists. "When it comes to art museums, for example, I don't feel that in recent years the Louvre has been a pioneer in any way, but in its early years it was the first museum to have art from all over Europe as a result of Napoléon's looting with his armies."

Then the man narrowly defeated by the Kennedy-Johnson ticket drew his distinction for students of the 1988 campaign, identifying Lloyd Bentsen, the vice presidential candidate, as "a mainstream Democrat. But Dukakis definitely is not." Rather, the presidential nominee was called a member of "the McGovern-Mondale wing of the Democratic Party."

The former president focused on the word mainstream.

rect. "The mainstream is too elections are won. parrow, too elitist," he said. "What we need is a broad river. You get your yachts on the mainstream. We need a river wide enough for a big boat with a lot of people."

That daringly turned the metaphor of the majority upside down. In John Milton's 1667 "Paradise Lost," the poet first used the collocation (found together, but not yet joined) to mean "principal, most":
"The neather Flood ... now divided into four main Streames." The first figurative sense of the phrase was used by Thomas Caryle in 1831, writing of "the Didactic Tendency . . . admitting that it still forms the main stream is no longer so pre-eminent." The word came to mean "centrist, or reflecting the prevailing culture or attitudes of the majority," and was used in politics as a synonym for the tired "middle of the road." In June of 1963, President John F. Kennedy told the Irish parliament in Dublin: "Ireland is moving in the mainstream of current world events."

Paul Goldberger, the architecthat he had been "neatly positioned in the last few years at the edge of the mainstream, neither too commercial nor too much the eccentric.

The noun was used adjectivally in the early 1970s in the phrase mainstream smoke, meaning "the smoke passing through the length of a cigarette or cigar," as opposed to sidestream smoke, which just drifts off the tip.

Now it is applied to politics to mean "the dominant course." Al-Jesse Jackson did, too. When ac- though we now see that it can be cused of being out of the main-stream, he said his critics were cor-enough, it modifies the place where

I don't know the reason for that exception, which is accepted also by Strunk. If most of us say "Kansas's drought," why not express that in writing as Kansas's drought. Perhaps the reason for the exception is that careful speakers and iters are to be discouraged from ug the sibilant possessive after sibilant words; that's why you and rarely be and rarely be and rarely be and rarely be a significant to the significant to the significant to the sibilant words; that's why you and rarely be and rarely be a significant to the SAMALLARI INCOME. The New York Times's style posts a second exception, regarding the vulnerable spot on the body of Achilles: "By custom the possessive of an ancient classical name is formed with an apostrophe only: Achilles' heel."

That brings us to the headling over a column earlier this month by Cord Meyer in The Washington Times, "Dukakis' Achilles' heel by which the columnist adverted to what he considered the candidate's damagingly dovish foreign-policy/ stands.

That headline's style had the vira peared in The New York Times the stand confiction.
